ATTENTION!!! ALL SPORTS BETTORS!

You can BET... On the NET

Wagernet is a service of Global Gaming Services Ltd. of Belize

The actual service will not be available through the World Wide Web, but will require hardware and software to access their server, which is in Belize

Where is Belize?

On-Line Sports Wagering Open to International Markets

Global Gaming Services Ltd, based in the country of Belize, is pleased to introduce WagerNet, the first and only on-line sports betting site on the Internet. WagerNet will provide sports fans with a legal way to bet on sporting events from anywhere in the world... 24 Hours a Day!

How it Works

First, there is a $100 setup fee, for necessary hardware and software. For security and privacy, all members are issued a card system linked to their personal computer to access WagerNet. Once on-line, the bettor selects the team/s and amount/s they wish to wager. WagerNet then matches your bet with an opposing bettor or bettors to cover your wager. WagerNet charges each bettor a transaction fee of ONLY 2.5% as opposed to the 10% fee charged by most bookmakers.

WagerNet Offers:

All Star Sports Handicapping
plus
Computerized Line Service

To better assist you with your sports wagers

ABSTRACT: Two new online casino gambling services based outside the US are trying to circumvent the regulatory laws that have kept other companies from cashing in on the demand for gambling services offered over the Internet. One analyst says legalized Internet gambling would be worth $10 billion a year. The Internet Online Offshore Electronic Casino, now functional but only offering a blackjack game, was developed by Warren B. Eugene and is based in the Turks and Caicos Islands. Eugene, a Canadian citizen, foresees a virtual Las Vegas of the future, in which several casino services will offer several games and accept direct deposit or virtual checks for money transactions. The WagerNet, developed by Kerry Rogers, is a sports betting service with hardware based in Belize. For an initial $1,000 deposit, users can post a betting proposition on the system, and other users can take the bet if they want it.

Kerry Rogers, who has been around Las Vegas for 23 years, says he believes that running a virtual betting parlor via the Internet will make his company, Wagnernet, millions. Some people, including representatives of the United States Government, say the service may violate Federal telecommunications laws.

"They've got stinking badges and guns; they can do whatever they want," says Rogers, who is doing his best to avoid "them" by establishing his operations in offshore climes like Tinian, Aruba and Belize. In Belize, where the scheme has obtained Cabinet approval and is awaiting a parliamentary O.K., officials see it as a way to obtain revenue "without the footprints of tourism," says Rogers, "gambling to save the rain forest." The idea is that an American could gamble through Belize, via computer, without ever leaving home. "Technically, they would be placing the bet in a foreign country," says Rogers, who has lawyers waiting to see if the Feds agree.

Wagnernet won't take bets directly, but will match up bettors, collecting a 2.5 percent transaction fee -- win, lose or draw -- with all the money passing electronically through a bank based in the country sanctioning the bets.
